Notes from Fr. Keith for 02/15/2009

Silence at Mass. It's not something many are comfortable with. We are used to entertainment that has no dead air, no pauses, and if nothing is happening we feel shortchanged. We may have also grown up with Masses that were celebrated at breakneck speed: a music historian says it's a heritage of the Irish, who had to get Mass over with quickly before Protestant British noticed and arrested them.

Silence at Mass is time for digestion, to reflect on what we've just heard. Silence at Mass is time for prayer, to pray freely inspired by what has just happened. It doesn't have to be library silence, strictly controlled by sharp glances, but a silence that begins from within, and it undisturbed by potential distractions. It is not passive silence, but silence at the edge of our chairs, at the edge of our souls waiting to be touched by God.

Mass is in God's Time, it is not measured by a clock. It is a place where God can work on us, heal us, inspire us, transform us. The silence we cultivate is a pool that God can stir, a space God's word can enter, a beginning of prayer and praise, a stillness that foretells a great movement. Silence at Mass is important, which is why I don't rush to the next reading or prayer at important times. Silence at Mass gives the seed of God's word time to flower, and the digest the Eucharist we share.
