Honor Our Military

Let's honor our military,
The men and women who serve,
Whose dedication to our country
Does not falter, halt or swerve.

Let's respect them for their courage;
They're ready to do what's right
To keep America safe,
So we can sleep better at night.

Let's support and defend our soldiers,
Whose hardships are brutal and cruel,
Whose discipline we can't imagine,
Who follow each order and rule.

Here's to those who choose to be warriors
And their helpers good and true;
They're fighting for American values;
They're fighting for me and you.

Notes for 5/27/2012

Searching my memories of Memorial Day, it's always struck me that this is an understated holiday. Sure, it's the official beginning of summer, but hot weather's usually here already, and I'm not interested in races in Indiana that much. I remember going to a couple of Memorial Day services as a kid at the local cemetery, but I don't remember more than green grass, bright sunlight and old men in uniforms.

My grandfather was in the Army at the end of World War I, sent on a rather useless mission to Siberia during the Russian Civil War. There were stories in my family about ancestors who were in the Civil War, although none of them involved combat. If you read much about war, it's a living nightmare that nearly no one wants to be part of. This is perhaps what we should remember: those who went into that piece of hell on earth and those who supported them during those times, for the lives they laid down so we could live comfortable lives here and now. The loss was not only lives taken on the battlefield, but lives interrupted and changed by these conflicts.

Reflecting on the sacrifices young men and women made over the years for the sake of our country leaves me rather speechless, and I have heard no words that take the place of this absence adequately except perhaps the Gettysburg Address. Perhaps this is the best tribute we could give those who gave their lives for our country in one way or other: reverent silent respect.
